Academic faculty in the arts at the University of Washington benefit greatly from their affiliation with a major research institution situated at the nucleus of the rich and vivid cultural environment of the Pacific Northwest. The research of our faculty takes place on the concert stage and in the recording studio, at the university and throughout the world, in collaborations and in solo endeavors, and in the pursuit of scholarly activities of historical, musicological, sociological, or theoretical significance. Our faculty are scholars, artists, educators, inventors, curators, and innovators. The work presented here represent some highlights of their research activities.

The University of Washington acknowledges the Coast Salish peoples of this land, the land which touches the shared waters of all tribes and bands within the Suquamish, Tulalip and Muckleshoot nations.
